That day seemed to be all we could desire it to bea deeply and impressive Sabbath of American patriotism. The people, as a general thing, seem to have no special promptings about patriotism, no particular regard for the dead who died for their country in many places on said day, but are coming to remember their own dead on that day, and it may be best, even if they care nothing for the Nation's dead. as to reach us not later than 9 o'clock a.m. Give facts in as few words as possible. RUSSIAN RULER'S TITLES.

Portentous String Proclaiming Him Ruler Over Scores.

The title of the ruler of all the Russians, as it was proclaimed solemnly in the Cathedral of the Assumption on May 26th, at the time of the crowning of the Czar, reads as follows:

"Nicholas II., by the grace of God. Emperor and autocrat of all the Russians, Czar of Moscow, of Kief, Vladimir, Novgorod, Kazan, Czar of Astrakhan, Czar of Poland, Czar of Siberia, Czar of gia, Lord of Pskov, Grand Duke of Smolensk, of Lithuania, of Volnynia, of Podolsk, and of Finland; Prince of Esthonia, of Livonia, of Kourland, of Semigalia, of Novgorod, the Lowlands, Tchernigov, Riazan, Polotsk, Rostov, Yaroslav, Bielosersk, Oodorsk, Obdorsk, Kondysk, Vytebsk, Mstisavsk, and commander of all the Northern lands, and the ruler of the lands of Iversk, Kartalinsk, the Kamountaineer principalities and that of the Tcherkesses; the monarch of Turkestan, heir to the throne of Norway, Duke of marsen, of Oldenbburg, &c."

The "&c." in the case seems to stand for anything on the face of the globe that a Czar of Russia may subsequently claim as his lawful possession. In case such a claim be disputed on the strength of the fact that the Czars have never yet styled themselves the possessors or heirs to the land in question in this official title, Rus sian diplomatists could always point to the convenient "&c." in the official title of Czar, claiming that the mention of that possessorship had been for convenience's sake merged in that extensible "&c." As it is, formidable even now are the numbers represented by the subjects of returns, as published in 1896, there are Russian Empire. Subdivided as to their Nationality, the subjects of the Czar are grouped as follows: There are among pays toll, votes the Democratic ticket | them 83,000,000 Russian Slavs, 8,000,000 Poles, 5,000,000 Finns, 4,500,000 Lithuanlans, 4,000,000 Hebrews, 4,000,000 Germans, 9 000,000 Tartars, 2,000,000 Caucasian mountaineers and 7,000,600 people
